Record 8,517 Students Increase API Problems

METROPOLITAN-TYPE TRAFFIC JAMS last until the evening shadows grow long across Ross Square, but this is not the point of congestion that most concerns the administration.

CLASSROOM CONGESTION in Broun Hall creates an extra-curricular problem for the math instructor and three students without seats. Too few teachers and inadequate space make this a typical API problem.

A new record enrollment of 8,517 students has swamped Auburn's already overloaded staff and overcrowded facilities. Auburn welcomes each new student that comes to the Plains, but each enrollment increase intensifies problems with which API has been struggling for several years.

President Ralph B. Draughon responded to the increase with this statement: "We must improve existing faculty salaries, add other faculty members at better salaries, and provide new buildings and equipment."

Auburn needs at least 102 additional teachers — from the rank of instructor to that of full professor — to meet present enrollment demands adequately.

In Dr. Draughon's canon there is no satisfactory alternative to the democratic concept of "taking care of the students who want to come to us." But implicit in his additional comment is recognition that inadequate financial support has already narrowed the college door at Auburn: "This year hundreds of students were rejected because of insufficient housing. No room reservations in the 12 women's dormitories were available after Jan. 25."

Each quarter hundreds of new Auburn graduates go forth to take their places in our democratic society. Numerous items in "Alumnalities" each month attest to how well they fill those places and to the quality of training which enables them to do so—But in recent years maintaining anything approaching the ideal quality of training throughout the college has become increasingly difficult because of class overloads and an inadequate proportion of highly-trained, experienced teachers.

With the aid of the Emergency Fund, the School of Engineering has initiated a recruiting program that has reversed the downward trend in that school. However, for the upward trend to continue in engineering, increased legislative support must be forthcoming.

In the meantime, for the college in general, Dr. Draughon says: "API continues to lose competent faculty members because it is unable to raise salaries to meet the competition of other colleges and industry. Many who could do much better salary-wise are staying merely because they like the college."

Auburn's average faculty salary is $1,018 less than the over-all average salary of all other land-grant colleges. Industrial salaries are much higher, in general, than those of any land-grant college.

The Auburn Library exemplifies the deficiency in facilities that has resulted from growing enrollments and little capital outlay for expansion. (See picture and outline below). A library building to meet present college needs will cost $2,500,000.

Enrollment Analysis

Men dominate the massive 8,517 enrollment with a total of 6,552; there are 1,965 women students. At Auburn for the first time are 2,201 students, of which 1,641 are freshmen and the other 560 transfer students.

Class division shows 2,887 freshmen, 1,673 sophomores, 1,736 juniors, and 1,361 seniors. There are 73 students in the last year of five-year courses and 655 graduate students. Pursuing their own particular interests are 32 unclassified students.

Enrollment by Schools

The School of Engineering leads other schools with an enrollment of 3,024. Science and Literature and the School of Education are virtually tied in second place; there are 1,600 in Science and Literature and 1,601 in Education, Architecture and the Arts has 644; Agriculture 578; Chemistry 394; Home Economics 272; Veterinary Medicine 227; and Pharmacy 174. (Note: In this breakdown, the 655 graduate students, who are actually registered in the Graduate School, have been assigned to the school which offers their major field of study.)

LIBRARY BOTTLENECK, shown at the left, is the result of 8,517 students using facilities designed to serve an enrollment of 700. This normal scene for a busy night is in the all-important reference room, where the student must begin research for his materials.

The young man in the background who seeks vainly for an empty seat will find the same delaying problems as he moves to other parts of the library. The present library has 27,000 square feet of space—a minimum of 150,000 are needed to house students and books. A college library should provide seating for 20 to 30 per cent of its students at any given time—Auburn's library jammed to capacity will barely hold six per cent of the present student body.

One hundred thousand volumes of Auburn's inadequate stock of books are stored in unsuitable temporary buildings, where they are difficult to find and subject to mold and the constant danger of fire. If the young people shown here find that they need one of these 100,000 volumes, they have to wait from 24 hours to six days for it to come from temporary storage.

With Widely-Experienced and Well-Trained Top Staff Members—

English Department Bears 3,350 Student Load

Executive ability and thorough scholarship are both necessary for the direction of Auburn's large English Department. The department's 53-member staff teaches more than 3,000 students each quarter; this fall 3,350 Auburn students are studying English. The magnitude of this teaching burden gains significance when one notes that two members of the staff are secretaries who do no teaching and 12 are teaching fellows—graduate students—who teach only a one-third load. In addition to their own teaching, top staff members serve as personal advisors to teaching fellows and conduct a regular teaching clinic for the fellows to insure efficient, effective teaching and equitable grading. Except for the secretaries, no member of the department escapes classroom duty—Dr. Walton R. Patrick, department head, and his chairman of freshman English (presently Dr. Frank McCann) share the classroom work with other staff members.

Versatility and thorough preparation in broad areas of human knowledge are necessary for a regular staff member, who may have to teach language and literature from the high school to the graduate level. A wide range of student preparation at the high school level necessitates three levels of teaching for basic freshman courses. This fall 65 per cent of entering freshmen were ready for the regular college composition course (EH 101); ten per cent were so well grounded in fundamentals that they entered an advanced course (EH 103), heavily loaded with extra reading in addition to the requisite student-written compositions; 25 per cent have inadequate mastery of fundamentals and are taking the non-credit course (EH 010), which begins with a review at the eighth grade level and proceeds through the twelfth grade level. For the English professor to have the privilege of teaching his chosen specialty in literature, he must also share the teaching load in business and professional writing, technical writing, sophomore surveys of all English literature, and the new humanities courses for engineers.

Added to other problems of the English Department are the inadequacies of the Auburn Library (See page 1) and the strange, but common, antipathy that most Americans have for the study of their native language (or any language for that matter).

Sound Instruction Program

The effectiveness with which the English Department meets its manifold problems is another manifestation of the dedicated teaching and scholarship that may be found at Auburn under difficult conditions. Auburn needs to offer no apologies to anyone for the quality of its instruction in English. Any undergraduate who achieves a reasonable mastery of the English program offered him may consider himself a highly literate alumnus upon graduation. A number of Auburn graduates with majors in English have won Fulbright Scholarships to study abroad—the most recent is Judy Lochridge '58 (See story on Judy Lochridge on page 11 of this issue).

In addition to its heavy undergraduate program, the API English Department offers a master's curriculum that has been favorably compared with the best of those in the Southern universities. Each professor who teaches a master's course is qualified to instruct doctoral candidates in English Literature. In recent years students from many different sections of the country have studied for a Master of Arts in English at Auburn.

Dr. Patrick

Dr. Brittin

Well-Rounded Faculty

The strength of the English Department is easily explained by a study of the composition and character of its faculty. Dr. Walton R. Patrick, a soft-spoken Mississippian who received his Ph.D. at Louisiana State University, has collected around him a staff with a significant variety of scholarly and teaching experiences. Fourteen members of his staff hold Ph.D.'s from ten top American universities. Two others are doctoral candidates and all instructors hold a master's degree. Staff members have attended 42 American colleges and universities, not to mention studies abroad and special post-doctoral studies in the U.S.A. They have taught at 32 colleges and universities other than API—including Harvard, Yale, Carnegie Tech, Columbia, and the University of Chicago as well as most of the outstanding Southern universities.

This great variety is not a matter of accident. Always eager to learn and improve teaching methods and materials, Dr. Patrick considers a variety of experience prerequisite to a vital departmental program. Departmental members feel that they have a working partnership with Dr. Patrick, who believes in both delegated responsibilities and teamwork. A change of curriculum or texts requires study on the part of each faculty member concerned and each has an opportunity for a full hearing of his recommendations. Thus the variety of experience and knowledge is welded into a program with unified aims and consistent standards.

The English Department's response last spring to Auburn's initiation of a new humanities program for engineers serves as an excellent example of the department's flexibility resulting from varied experience and teamwork. The department quickly and carefully worked out a course in great ideas developed by the Greek, Roman, and Hebraic civilizations, established basic goals for it, and prepared a competent staff to teach several sections of it. The course compares favorably with similar courses at Georgia Tech, Carnegie Tech, and Massachusetts Institute of Technology.

Departmental Problems

Like every other department on the campus, the English Department has its unsolved problems. Most of them stem from overloaded faculty members and inadequate library facilities. Dr. Patrick notes that heavy teaching loads and numerous sections prevent close personal supervision of all instruction; experienced advisors and teaching clinics for new, inexperienced teachers serve to remedy this deficiency in general, but do not prevent occasional teaching mistakes that closer supervision would limit or more readily correct. Heavy class loads also restrict the amount of time permitted for personal conferences with students; such conferences are particularly important in composition courses in which students have many peculiarly personal problems in diction, organization, and logic.

Inadequate library facilities are a grave handicap to both professorial and student research. As one professor notes, "For example, it is tragic to arouse a student's interest in the origin of democratic concepts and then have him go to the library and fail to secure the books necessary to satisfy his curiosity. The enthusiasm for knowledge thus lost may never occur again in such force during his lifetime."

Thumbnail Sketches

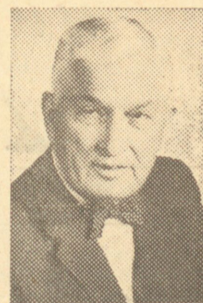

Auburn's English staff might well consider itself a fraternity of men dedicated to the pursuit of perfection and truth with the full knowledge that neither absolute truth nor perfection is within the grasp of any man. Away from the immediate problems of the classroom, they explore the outer limits of knowledge in varied directions and as a result produce many valuable scholarly papers and some textbooks, novels, short stories, and poems.

Thumbnail pictures on this page show many of API's English professors. Following are thumbnail sketches on all members holding the rank of associate professor or above. Unfortunately space does not permit going beyond this arbitrary breaking point to lower professorial ranks, where many other excellent teachers and promising scholars exist.

Do We Protest Much Too Loudly?

By Jerry Roden, Jr., '46

Since the launching of Sputnik I, there has been much brave talk about America's educational needs, but all of the talk has resulted in little broad-scale action. Congress provided some valuable aid for schools at all levels in its recent passage of the National Defense Education Act, but the act does not come close to meeting the demands of critical school problems or to giving the support that such able spokesmen for education as Alabama's Senator Lister Hill and Rep. Carl Elliott requested. This editor still believes that Congress is a good barometer of public opinion in matters of general importance. Hence, we must assume that Congress failed to do more because the public really demanded no more.

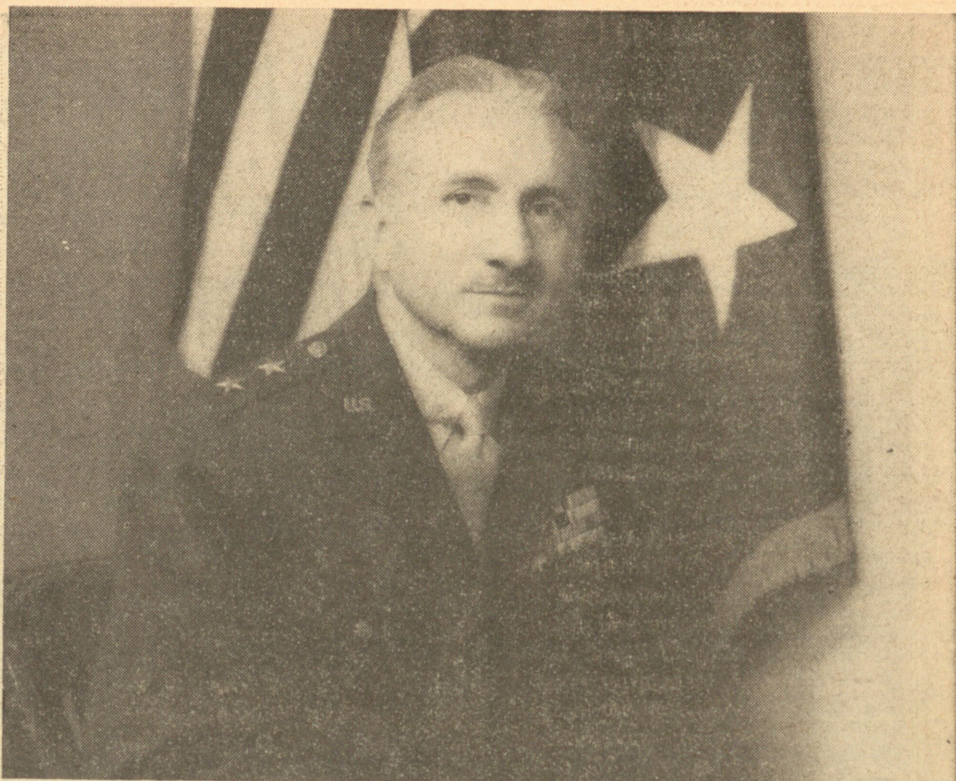

Auburn must, of course, depend chiefly upon the Alabama Legislature for support. There is much evidence that Governor-Nominate John Patterson and the incoming Alabama Legislature are sincerely interested in remedying the critical situation in Alabama schools, but the State Legislature is just as sensitive to public opinion as Congress. Some of its members will doubtless fight for education down to the last roll call if necessary, as many of them did in the last Alabama Legislature, but in the final analysis the Legislature will probably provide just about the measure of relief that the public demands.

Money alone will certainly not remedy all of education's ills, but very few of them can be remedied without increased financial support. For example, in the September issue of the Alumnews we proposed establishing satisfactory standards for teaching performance. A fair set of standards can operate effectively only if a teacher is given a fair opportunity to teach. Overloaded classes are the greatest deterrent to effective teaching. Overloaded classes not only give a teacher so much work grading papers that he does not have time for adequate teaching preparation; they also adversely affect, in many subtle ways, the relationship between the class and the teacher, creating misunderstandings, discipline problems, and unnecessary antagonisms. Providing an adequate increase in the number of teachers for Alabama's colleges, high schools, and elementary schools will require a considerable increase in financial support—a glance at that portion of our front page story dealing with Auburn's need for teachers should indicate how much relief will be required for the state, because Auburn's problem is very much like that of other state schools at all levels. One can multiply these examples with more supporting details than space in the Alumnews for a whole year will permit.

From now until the Legislature meets next year, the Alumnews will attempt to outline Auburn's needs so that alumni may be able to speak to their legislators in behalf of their Alma Mater. Further information will be forthcoming in various forms from the college administration. We hope that Auburn alumni will take a leading role not only in presenting the needs of Auburn but in creating a climate of opinion favorable to greatly increased support for all Alabama schools. Auburn's future is intricately involved with the future of all state schools—and the future of the State of Alabama depends upon all of them.

If the Alabama Legislature fails to provide substantial relief for education, it will do so only because the citizens do not demand it. The responsibility rightly belongs to the people. We repeat that Congress and state legislators are good barometers of public opinion and they should be; for legislators to act in opposition to the desires of the overwhelming majority of their constituents makes representative government a mockery. Auburn men and women can explain the need and help create the public desire that will lead to bold legislative action.

Major Gen. WILTON B. (JERRY) PERSONS—Presidential Assistant

Gen. Persons Achieves An Unsought Eminence

Auburn alumnus Maj. Gen. Wilton Burton Persons '16, who has succeeded Sherman Adams as President Dwight D. Eisenhower's number one assistant, reached his unsought position of political importance by an unusual route. His boyhood ambition was an Army career; at Auburn he graduated in electrical engineering and was a cadet drill captain; he got into the Army when the United States entered World War I by using the now well-known formula of bananas and water to gain weight—Army minimum specifications were 133 pounds; Mr. Persons weighed in at a spare 129 before rushing to a nearby drugstore for the quick growth diet.

After combat service in France he served in various military positions until 1933 when he was transferred to Washington, where he served as a liaison man between the Department of War and the House Military Affairs Committee. He has been dealing with Congress during most of the years since that time. At the time of his retirement from active military service in 1949 he was Director, Office of Legislative Liaison, Secretary of Defense. During World War II he requested combat command, but was refused because of his importance as a personal representative for Chief of Staff Gen. George C. Marshall in conducting War Department relations with Congress. Nevertheless, he made a number of aerial inspection trips during combat in Europe and the Middle East for the Chief of Staff, including inspection of the amphibious landings in Southern France.)

After 32 years of service, General Persons retired because of physical disability and became director of the Staunton Military Academy in Virginia. A long-time friend of President Eisenhower he returned to the national and international scene in 1951 by becoming General Eisenhower's aid while Eisenhower was Supreme Commander of Allied Forces in Europe.

He later worked with Candidate Eisenhower in the 1952 presidential campaign. Until his recent promotion to presidential assistant, he served as deputy presidential assistant.

Consensus of press opinion is that Gen. Persons will do his new job well and that his appointment is a popular one with Congress. Despite bouts with ill health he has been one of the hardest and most intense workers on the White House staff during President Eisenhower's tenure; yet he is reported to appear calm and relaxed in contacts with reporters and legislators alike. He long ago earned the respect of Congress for not only serving the interest of the military during one of the most critical periods in American history, but also for being "a watchdog for Congress and the public."

Gen. Persons belongs to a family in which Auburn is a tradition and he lists foremost among his memories of Auburn "a school spirit unequalled anywhere to my knowledge, and a friendliness that I will never forget." His father was born in Auburn and studied pharmacy here before establishing a drug concern in Montgomery. Three brothers—the late Joe R. Persons '08, Brig. Gen. John W. Persons '19, and former Alabama Governor Gordon Persons '25—and his son, Wilton B. Persons, Jr., '44, are among the many members of his family who have studied on the Plains.

Of his appointment Brother Gordon, staunch loyal Democrat, said, "He'll make good. He's a boy that has always had his feet on the ground."

Comments on Appointment

Edward T. Folliard of the Washington Post said: "Republicans and Democrats tried to outdo each other yesterday in praising the appointment of Gen. Persons to succeed Adams."

Some typical comments from both sides of the political fence are: Sen. Mike Mansfield (Montana Democrat) — "Gen. Persons is an old-time Army friend of the President and served with him in NATO. He has been cooperative and understanding at all times and will bring about a close relationship between Congress and the White House. He has played the game square. He is a man of high integrity and great capabilities."

Sen. Styles Bridges (New Hampshire Republican) — "Gen. Persons knows thoroughly the field of Federal Government. He is an outstanding man of the highest integrity and he will do an outstanding job. Congress has faith in him."

RONNIE ROBBS leaves the Auburn-Tennessee game and football for the 1958 season. The junior fullback from Chattanooga follows junior quarterback Bryant Harvard to make two key Auburn men lost for the season. Gallant fighters both, Bryant and Ronnie are already making plans for spring practice and another season while they are still busily rooting for their teammates in the present campaign.

Highlights From First Two Games

By Bill Beckwith

COACH'S NIGHTMARE—Coach Ralph Jordan's dream prior to the Tennessee game was told in a national wire story but it's worth repeating. He dreamed that we were playing the Vols at Knoxville and the green Tifton 57 grass ran all the way up into the stands. We kicked off and Tennessee marched 80-yards for a TD. They kicked off and to the amazement of all, the officials put the ball in play on a four-lane highway. Realizing a possible mistake and facing a 15-yard penalty, Jordan charged the referee. After a heated argument, the referee called George Gardner (head of SEC officials) down from the press box. Gardner broke out the game contract and it stated "when Tennessee has the ball it will be on the grass—when Auburn has the ball it will be on a four-lane highway."

Beckwith

Taking the penalty, Coach Jordan related that he had to give in, Auburn, with Lloyd Nix at the throttle, began to move. Although they were out-of-sight, Jordan knew they were making first downs. Hearing a whistle for timeout, Coach Jordan was approached by a worried Nix. "Coach," said Lloyd, "we've come to a traffic circle and I just want to know if you want us to go left or right?" With this, Jordan awoke at 3:00 a.m. in a cold sweat.

REHASH OF THE TV SPECIAL — Husky Tackle Teddy Foret was relating the incident which occurred in the Auburn-Tennessee nationally televised game in Birmingham: "Three times when we broke the huddle after timeouts, the officials made us go back because the signal from the press box was that Lindsey Nelson and Red Grange were giving commercials. I thought it odd," Foret continued, "but Jackie Burkett got mad. He told that official that we came to beat Tennessee and no dad-blamed commercial was going to stop us."

When Auburn defeated Chattanooga in Auburn in the second game of the season, history was made for the Tigers in many ways. Here's some of the history-making incidents:

(1) The Tigers' 16 consecutive victories tied the second all-time SEC record for consecutive victories with Georgia Tech. Tennessee holds the record of 33 straight. This was also an all-time Auburn consecutive victory record.

(2) Auburn won its 18th consecutive victory in Cliff Hare Stadium. The last loss in the stadium was on November 8, 1952, to Mississippi State.

(3) Track Coach Wilbur Hutsell missed his first campus game since 1921. He was in Missouri visiting his ailing mother.

(4) The nation's longest winning streak of 16 straight held up again.

Auburn's climb to the No. 1 position in the nation in Associated Press and United Press International Polls on October 7 was credited to the great performance against Tennessee. The Tiger defense held the Vols to no first downs and minus six yards for the game. The very next week, Tennessee defeated Mississippi State.

To the knowledge of SEC statisticians, this was the first time a team had been held to no first downs in a conference game. Checking the Auburn record book however, it was found that Auburn held Georgia Tech to no first downs in 1904 here on the Plains.

A lot of credit for the early season high rating also must go to Senior Halfback Jimmy Laster who caught two touchdown passes totaling exactly 100 yards and prevented a 96-yard Chattanooga kickoff return for a touchdown when he caught Bill Butler from behind. Laster also played lefthalf, righthalf, and fullback in the game.

Tigers Topple Kentucky Wildcats

A fourth period rally—Auburn's new trademark—marked the 8-0 victory by Coach Ralph Jordan's Tigers over the University of Kentucky before a capacity crowd of 36,000 fans in Stoll Field, Lexington, Saturday night, Oct. 11.

This season Auburn has scored 45 of 51 points in the last half and 39 of 51 in the final period while taking the measure of Tennessee, Chattanooga, and now Kentucky for their 15th, 16th, and 17th consecutive victories.

The big play against Coach Blanton Collier's Wildcats was a 43-yard TD pass play from Quarterback Lloyd Nix to Righthalf Jimmy Laster with 14:20 remaining in the final period.

A few minutes later, Auburn added a safety to their margin when Tackle Teddy Foret led a Tiger pack that dropped Lefthalf Calvin Bird in his own end one for a safety and the final margin.

End Jerry Wilson, Guard Zeke Smith, and Center Jackie Burkett led the great Tiger line charge which held the Kentuckians to 92 yards on the ground and 37 via air. The deepest Wildcat penetrations—inside the 35 twice in the first half—were halted by a pair of interceptions by Righthalf Lamar Rawson. The Wildcats made 5 first downs to Auburn's 12.

Offensively, Lefthalf Tommy Lorino was the Auburn star with 75 yards in a dozen carries. All told, Auburn gained only 110 yards rushing but the big Plainsman weapon was the forward pass—all of the 159 yards in that department coming in the last half.

Nix went 0-6 passing in the first half, but completed 8 of 13 for 149 yards in the second. Wilson was the leading receiver with four catches, but Laster's grab was the big one.

The Average Tire Builders

"The average tire builder in the rubber plants in Akron earns more than the $6,120 paid as the all-American average for professors. This is not to say that the tire builder does not deserve his high wages, but it does emphasize that our college teachers must have higher salaries if we want trained intelligence as much as we want good tires."—Dr. Norman P. Auburn, president of Akron University.

Auburn Alumnalities

1899-1906

Miss Kate Lane '99 has donated a silver tray and candelabra to Mary Lane Hall in memory of the late Mrs. George Petrie for whom the dormitory was named.

James E. Seale '04 now resides in Montgomery.

William J. McBride '06 retired on May 1 after spending 50 years in engineering work. He served with General Electric Co. for 26 years in Lynn, Mass., and 24 years with Ingersoll-Rand Co. in Phillipsburg, N. J. He is residing in Easton, Pa.

The Class of 1908 is holding its Fiftieth Anniversary Reunion in Auburn on Nov. 7-9. The Class has published an excellent reunion booklet, including thumbnail biographies of class members and "The Voyage and Travayles of Mus Decumanus" by Carl Gilbert Gaum. The Alumnees, beginning with this issue, will reprint thumbnail biographies of all living alumni, who have not been featured in this publication during recent years. Biographies will be printed, as space permits, in alphabetical order in consecutive issues until concluded. Since information on a few members of the class was not available, we will appreciate any information and full information on any omitted members.

Carl Edward Barker, Civil Engineering, Selma, for the first two years after leaving Auburn was assistant county engineer of Jefferson County, then assistant city engineer of Birmingham. From this he went to the Tennessee Coal, Iron and Railroad Company until 1911 and then with the War Department until 1914. He was for many years connected with the Shell Oil Company, having joined that company in 1917. In 1948 he was appointed assistant to the president, which place he held until he was retired by the company in 1953. He was president of the Shell Aviation Corporation, also president of the Shell Interstate Communications, Inc., also president of Tax Institute, Inc., of New York City. Member St. Louis Analysts Assn., American Society of Military Engineers. His clubs are the 25 year Club of Petroleum Industry, N. Y., New York City Athletic Club, and the Rotary Club of St. Louis. Carl is now retired but devotes part time as Investment Counselor of the Associated Fund, Inc., with home at 529 East Essex Ave., Kirkwood, Missouri. He is married, has two children and six grandchildren.

Stephen Radford Batson, Civil Engineering, Bessemer, now lives at 1430 N. 30th St., Birmingham. After graduation he coached the Birmingham Southern football team that fall. For the next three years he was the principal assistant county engineer of Jefferson County, becoming county engineer in 1912 and holding this position until he was appointed State Highway Commissioner by Gov. Thos. E. Kilby in 1920. At the conclusion of this four year term he was selected county commissioner and remained in this place until he founded the S. R. Batson Construction Company in 1935. From this he retired in 1950 and devotes part of his time to his cattle farm. He is married, has four children and seven grandchildren.

Henry H. Booth, Anniston, Ala., returned to Anniston, where he is now the agent for the Sinclair Refining Co. He is married, has two children and one grandchild.

Leon G. Brooks, General Course, Brewton, after graduation attended the University of Alabama where he received his Bachelor of Laws degree in 1910. He returned to Brewton and lives at 417 Belleville Ave., where his practice of law was interrupted by the First World War. When the war ended he was in the Officers school at Camp Zachary Taylor where he was training as an officer in the field artillery. He has been one of Escambia County's foremost lawyers and still is. He is president of the Graham-Brooks Co. of Atmore, a wholesale company established in 1919. He served as Mayor of Brewton from 1912 to 1914, in the State Senate for the 1923-'27 session and was president of the Brewton City Board of Education from 1923 to 1945, and was chairman of the Escambia County Hospital Board from 1946 to 1949. He has not yet retired. He is married, has three children and eight grandchildren.

Orrin Brown, Opelika, now lives at 612 North 8th St., Opelika and has been in the banking business since a few years after leaving Auburn. He is now cashier of the Opelika National Bank and has had this office for more than thirty years. During this time he has played a prominent part in the civic and social life of his home town. He did not get into the war. He is married, has one child and three grandchildren.

Eugene Vernon Camp, Electrical Engineering, Dalton, Ga., after receiving his B.S. Degree went on the following year to the University of Illinois for his Masters Degree in Electrical Engineering. From 1910 through the following two years he served as resident and design engineer for the Jaudon Engineering Co. and as superintendent of public works at Bamburg, S. C. The next five years were spent as chief engineer for the Jaudon Company at Savannah and Atlanta. In March of 1917 he struck out for himself as a consulting engineer with offices in Atlanta, and in 1920 headed a group which was known as E. V. Camp & Associates, consulting engineers, of which he is still the head. Out of this grew the National Traffic Guard Co. and the E. V. Camp Steel Works, both of which he still heads.

Young Heads West Texas Utilities

Out in the Lone Star State, where they do many things in a big way, Calvin L. Young '20 has earned a position that puts him well up in the elite company of distinguished API electrical engineering graduates. Cal, as he is known to thousands of West Texans, became president of the mammoth West Texas Utilities Company in August, 1955. His company provides electric energy for a segment of Texas equal to seven eastern states.

CALVIN L. YOUNG . . . president

Mr. Young is known as a master of organization in Abilene and throughout the area because of his dedicated civic work as well as because of his executive ability for the utility company. He has worked with the Chamber of Commerce, served with quasi-governmental agencies, and devoted his genius to the development and support of many welfare agencies.

He is now president of the Abilene Chamber of Commerce, of the Abilene United Fund, and is a director of the Texas Atomic Energy Research Foundation, a non-profit organization jointly sponsoring with the General Dynamics Corporation research on thermonuclear control of hydrogen fusion. He is also a director in the West Central Texas Municipal Water district—a $10,000,000 agency planned to provide municipal water on a multi-city basis.

Actively interested in education, Mr. Young was chairman of a Citizens Advisory Committee on the Separation of the Abilene School System from the municipality—the committee's work resulted in the desired separation and the approval of a $4,750,000 school bond issue. With that task done, he is now serving on a Citizens Bond Committee as chairman of the sub-committee studying Abilene municipal water and sewer needs.

Mr. Young is also an active church worker, serving as elder of the Abilene First Presbyterian Church, heading the church's visitation program, and working with the Boy Scouts. He was chairman of the Chisholm Trail Council Boy Scout Building Campaign in 1956. He is now a director of the Abilene Y.M.C.A.

His climb to his present position of industrial and civic eminence might well serve as a model for intelligent application of talents. After leaving Auburn he went to Massachusetts Institute of Technology where he received another degree in electrical engineering in 1922. He was a student engineer in the General Electric training program in 1923-1924. In 1924 he joined West Texas Utilities Company in Abilene as an assistant to the company's general superintendent. He supervised the construction of many of the company's early substations and transmission lines. He became Chief Engineer for the company in 1935, vice-president and a member of the board of directors in 1953, and president in 1955.

Mr. Young was born in Marshall, Tex., in 1899. He graduated from high school there and then came to Auburn. He is married to the former Totsie Edwards and they have a son, Tom, who is an industrial engineer for the New Mexico Electric Company at Hobbs, N. Mex.

ALUMNALITIES

Dr. Fuller is an entomologist with the Texas Agricultural Extension Service, Texas A. & M., College Station, Tex. Dr. Fuller also holds an M.S. (1950) in entomology from API. His Ph.D. was granted by Texas A & M in 1954. His wife is the former Marie Marschall of San Angelo, Tex., and is a Baylor English and journalism graduate.

New Addresses: Mrs. Laurette Strickland Smith, Montreal, Canada; the Rev. James L. Pharr, College Ave. Baptist Church, Lenoir, N. C.; Henry C. Wiggins, Columbia, S. C.; Alonzo H. Kelly, Jr., Ann Arbor, Mich.; Maj. James R. Barton, Hyde Park, Mass.; Jack M. Moore, Bellbrook, Ohio; DeWitt M. Shy, Raleigh, Tenn.

Henry G. Pitchford has registered at Emory University for doctoral studies.

NCAA ILL WIND PROVIDES SPORTSWRITER HARVEST

Auburnites may derive a wry satisfaction from the fact that the ill wind which has blown from the NCAA upon Plainsman athletic endeavors has brought a few sportswriters the good opportunity of making a few dollars from polemic art submitted to national sports magazines.

Engineer Tidwell Retiring

OTTO WILSON TIDWELL

Otto Wilson Tidwell '12 is retiring after service with the Corps of Engineers. Upon graduation he joined the Alabama Power Company. For the next 10 years he worked throughout North Alabama and Tennessee for the Alabama Power Company and the Corps of Engineers on various power projects which now make up the Tennessee Valley Authority. In 1922 he went with the North Carolina Highway Department and returned to the Alabama Power Company the following year.

In 1931 Mr. Tidwell rejoined the Corps of Engineers and completed 30 years of Engineer activities in September.

Among the many projects for which Mr. Tidwell served as Resident Engineer for the Mobile District were at Fort Rucker and Eglin Air Force Base, Pearl River, Jim Woodruff, Demopolis, Warrior and the Jackson Locks and Dams.

Mr. Tidwell will remain in Jackson, Alabama, until after the first of the year.

He received an M.S. from Denver University in August.

C. D. Price, Jr., former district commercial supervisor for Southern Bell in Montgomery, is district manager of the telephone company's central district in Birmingham.

Among Auburn Alumni Immortal

"Some men so live that passing time does not diminish their stature nor dim the lustre of their deeds after they themselves have departed the earthly scene." Posthumous honors to such men serve not so much to pay tribute where tribute is due as to remind those who render such honors what debts the present generation owes great figures of past. From these reminders we gain both personal humility and a deeper sense of human dignity. It thus seems fitting here at the beginning of a new academic year for The Alumnus to take more than the passing notes earlier made of signal honors paid during the past year to two of Auburn's alumni immortal.

Dr. Walter L. Fleming

Last fall Dr. Walter Lynwood Fleming '96—historian, scholar, and teacher—was elected to the Alabama Hall of Fame. Dr. Fleming won particular distinction as a research scholar and writer on Southern Reconstruction. His nomination for the Hall of Fame said in part: "He distinguished himself as scholar, researcher, writer, and inspiring teacher in the Reconstruction period of Alabama and the South. In this field he was an eminent pioneer, and his name stands for impartial yet sympathetic investigation of this important epoch."

Dr. Fleming's published works constitute his most fitting memorial. He published 176 items, including five volumes of edited materials, five volumes as author, 44 articles in scholarly journals, and 65 sketches in biographical dictionaries. A tribute as fitting as his election to the Hall of Fame is the annual series of Walter Lynwood Fleming Lectures on Southern History instituted by Louisiana State University in his memory in 1937. These lectures have been given annually by some of this country's most distinguished historians. Wendell L. Stephenson's 1955 Fleming Lectures were devoted to Dr. Fleming and two other Southern historians; these lectures have been published under the title, The South Lives in History, Southern Historians and Their Legacy. In this volume, Stephenson gives a complete bibliography of Dr. Fleming's major works that will be very useful for those who wish to pursue living Southern history.

Stephenson's work is only the latest in a series of scholarly articles which have appeared about Dr. Fleming since his death in 1932 and which indicate his importance in Alabama and Southern historiography.

To suggest that Dr. Fleming's claim to immortality rests principally upon his published works is to minimize the role of the great teacher. He taught at West Virginia University from 1904-

1907 and at Louisiana State University from 1907-1917. In 1917 he went to Vanderbilt University as professor of history; in 1923 he became dean of the College of Arts and Sciences and director of the graduate school at Vanderbilt.

Dr. Fleming was greatly influenced by Auburn's great teacher, the late Dean George Petrie whose gift for inspiring students with a genuine love for history became a tradition of the Plains. There is ample reason to assume from many reports that Dr. Fleming too had the ability to so inspire students and that from his students have come some who continue to inspire students with a genuine love for history.

General Robert Lee Bullard was Alabama's and Auburn's first lieutenant general. After Bullard Field became the site for new women's dormitories instead of a drill field for marching cadets, a new men's dormitory was appropriately named Bullard Hall. During Village Fair last spring a portrait of General Robert Lee Bullard '84 was unveiled in Bullard Hall. It is an excellent portrait, copied from an original that occupies a permanent place in the Cadet Reception Room in the United States Military Academy at West Point, N. Y. The original was painted by the late DeWitt Lockman; the one in Bullard Hall by John W. Pratten.

A mere recitation of his services and of his honors can no more recapture the spirit of the man who commanded the Second Army, American Expeditionary Forces in France, during World War I than the photographic reproduction on this page can recapture the excellencies of his portrait. But those characteristics that resulted in the deeds which command our tribute are reflected, for those who care to read, in his book on World War I—American Soldiers Also Fought.

American Soldiers Also Fought reveals a courageous spirit with a sense of deep pride, not in his own deeds which he scarcely mentions, but in America and American fighting men. It shows also a keen intelligence that penetrates our foibles too, and the concluding paragraph of General Bullard's preface proffers an admonition that is as appropriate now as when it first appeared: "Throughout history we have stumbled into our wars, and between whiles we give no thought at all to the subject. For months now war clouds have been hanging over Europe; and this has been accompanied by discussions as to whether, inevitably, we would be dragged into war in Europe. It is especially pertinent now to review the facts about our last war in Europe." One only need now add the Orient to Europe to bring General Bullard's observation up to date.

It would be amiss in this too scanty tribute to leave the impression that General Bullard's only services to his country were on the battlefields of France. After graduating from West Point, to which he went from Auburn, he also fought in the Apache Indian War, the Philippine American War, the Mexican border pursuit of Villa.

MISS LOLA McCULLOUGH (left) teaches first year Latin at 12 noon each day Monday through Thursday over Auburn Educational Television (Channels 2, 7, and 10). Shown here with her is one of her star pupils, King Charest, from Tallahassee. King did so well on ETV lessons that her parents now bring her to Auburn three times weekly for supplemental instruction; she has averaged 100 on all lessons and tests. Auburn Television initiated the Latin course as a part of its "In-School Program" at the request of several high schools. Other students seem to be doing quite well, even without the personal instruction. Miss McCullough taught Latin at Huntingdon College in Montgomery for a number of years.

CORRECTION

By one of those bizarre errors that can occur only when gremlins get in type cases two items under the class of 1954 were combined in the September Alumnews with unfortunate results. The two items were submitted in copy as follows:

James L. Wall, Jr., is an engineer with Douglas Aircraft Co. in Cape Canaveral, Fla.

Ralph J. Morris is a chemical engineer with Chemstrand Corp. in Pensacola, Fla. His wife, Carolyn (Tootsie) Jenkins '54, teaches in Pensacola, Fla.

The two items were combined in typesetting and appeared in the Alumnews as follows:

James L. Wall Jr., is an engineer with Chemstrand Corp. in Pensacola, Fla. His wife, Carolyn (Tootsie) Jenkins '54, teaches in Pensacola.

Information contained in the former two items is correct; that in the latter item is patently false: James L. Wall, Jr., is a happily confirmed bachelor, working for Douglas Aircraft at Cape Canaveral; Ralph J. Morris and Carolyn (Tootsie) Jenkins are just as happily married and live in Pensacola, where he works for Chemstrand and she teaches school.

JUDY LOCHRIDGE . . . scholar

Judy Lochridge Wins Fulbright Scholarship

Fulbright scholarship winner Sara Lou (Judy) Lochridge '58 has carried the Auburn Spirit to Paris, where she has gone for language study, lectures, receptions, and tours prior to entering the University of Lyons in November.

Judy takes the Congressional statement of purpose for the Fulbright scholarship program seriously; she intends to do her part "to promote better understanding of the United States abroad, and to increase mutual understanding between the people of the United States and the people of other countries." To fulfill this purpose, nothing will serve better than the manifestation of Judy's version of the Auburn Spirit.

At Auburn Judy studied seriously and played cheerfully with a wholesome zest for both activities, and in the same spirit she sailed for France on September 20. After her present tour of Paris, she will concentrate on 17th century French drama, the neo-classical period, on which her study project is centered. She hopes to take also a few courses in contemporary fiction during the school year.

Judy majored in English at Auburn. While here she served as president and secretary of the Women's Student Government Association, vice-president of Phi Mu, and vice-president of Owls. She was a member of Mortar Board and Phi Kappa Phi, was listed in Who's Who Among Students in American Colleges and Universities, and received the Algernon Sydney Sullivan Award. She is the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. H. B. Lochridge of Montgomery.
